MAIN RESEARCH INTERESTS

The main research interest of our laboratory is to understand the dynamics of populations of bacterial pathogens from human and animal origin and the molecular mechanisms involved in pathogen adaptation and virulence.

Research activities include: i) Comparison of phenotypes/genotypes of bacterial species/strains from different niches, clinical origins and hosts; ii) Analysis of the genomic structure and potential for horizontal gene transfer of phages (bacterial virus) and of other mobile genetic element; iii) Study of antimicrobial resistance patterns and mechanisms of resistance; iv) Investigation of the biological activity of new materials and new biocompounds against various pathogens; iv) Investigation of tailor-made strategies for infection control and risk assessment for bacterial colonization and infection.

Keywords. Biochemistry & Molecular Biology; Molecular Microbiology; Bacterial Genetics; Molecular Epidemiology; Bacteriophages; Veterinary; Infectious Diseases; Virulence; Pathogenesis.
